The 355th Operations Support Squadron evaluated seven 354th Fighter Squadron members June 9 during a pilot decontamination exercise.

The pilot decon exercise involves an aircrew member simulating the transition from a chemical to a clean environment after a flight.

"If a plane has to land in a condition black, this exercise trains our people to survive the scenario," said Master Sgt. David Nelson, 355th OSS assistant life support superintendent for

Airman receives larceny conviction

An airman basic from the 755th Aircraft Maintenance Squadron was convicted of larceny in a summary court martial here June 11.

The airman pled guilty to stealing property from another airman in the dorms and housebreaking, said 1st Lt. Jeff Black, 355th Wing trial counsel for the case.

The convicted airman was sentenced to seven months in confinement, forfeiture of $500 a month for seven months and a bad conduct discharge.

"This result should serve as a warning to people that thieves on base will eventually be caught and prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law," said Capt. Matt Cassell, 355th Wing military justice chief.

"The sentence passed down to the convicted airman is a tough one," said Black. "A court-martial conviction counts as a federal conviction and will stay with the member for the rest of his life." The full punishment for this crime involves more than a conviction, grade reduction and confinement.

"The discharge will involve recoupment of educational assistance like the Montgomery GI Bill, special pay and bonus money," said Black. Despite severe consequences like these, not everyone learns from others' mistakes.

"There is another court martial pending against another airman here being tried for larceny," said Cassell.

The Air Force Office of Special Investigation and the 355th Security Forces are working together with the legal office to ensure this will not become a negative trend.

"If you steal from the Air Force or other individuals, you will get caught," said Cassell. "Eventually OSI or security forces office of investigation will find you." But it is only OSI's job to catch the offender; punitive action is delivered by someone else.

"Once OSI catches you, we will prosecute you," added Cassell, "and we have a slew of tools we will use to do it." This is not to say an accused, who is innocent, will get put away with the guilty.

"In the Air Force, we go through a very complicated process to make sure our people get a fair trial," said Cassell. "We want them to be 100 percent aware of their rights if they choose to plead guilty."

Warning

Davis-Monthan Air Force Base members are cautioned against purchasing Operation Noble Eagle and Operation Enduring Freedom medals via the Internet. The ONE/OEF medals being advertised for sale through the Internet are not approved to wear.

The creation of two medals, an expeditionary medal for those who deploy and a service medal for those who provide combat support, is currently underway, but is not complete. The Office of the Secretary of Defense is still working on a final draft of the criteria and projects about one year until the medal set is available.

AF strives to avoid more injuries

Recently two boys, age 11 and 12, received an electrical shock while playing in a construction site on a United States Air Forces in Europe installation.

At the construction site was a small trench, approximately two-to three-feet deep, dug to install a water pipe for a nearby building. This particular site was located at the junction of two streets near the base athletic fields and military family housing playground areas. The area was also used as a short cut for those children leaving the playground who live in the nearby military family housing area.

The boys entered the construction site through an unbarricaded section. They found several unsecured three- to four-foot pieces of steel (rebar) with sharpened ends. Naturally, the steel pieces became spears in an imaginary game.

The boys proceeded to throw and retrieve their spears from the trench. One of the bars penetrated an 11,000 volt buried electrical cable causing an arc flash. The arc from the discharge caused injuries to both boys.

The child most seriously injured received second- to third-degree burns to his hands, as well as some minor facial burns. The other child suffered less severe flash burns. Both boys' hair and eyebrows were singed from the intense heat. Fortunately, neither suffered any lasting debilitating injuries.

As members of the USAFE family, and our even larger Air Force family, it's imperative that we watch out for one another. While we may not be able to protect our children from every danger that may come their way, it's all of our jobs to minimize any risks or hazards. If you see an unsafe area, or even think it's unsafe, don't hesitate to contact your installation safety office or civil engineer construction management office.

It's not a "safe" world. Be smart, watch out for each other and minimize risks. (Courtesy United States Air Forces in Europe.)

Who to call for safety issues

According to Michael Barnes, 355th Wing ground safety manager, even with the extreme cautions Davis-Monthan Air Force Base takes to fence in construction areas, there is always a fear that terrible things like what happened at the base in Europe can happen here. This is especially true considering the amount of work that is currently being done around the housing areas. However, Barnes reminds the D-M community there are ways to avoid placing children in harm's way. "When you see a problem, whether it is a knocked down cable, broken glass or anything that appears to be a hazard, call us and we'll get it fixed," said Barnes.

For safety issues, call the safety office at 228-5342. Housing safety issues can be directed to the housing office at 228-5455. For emergencies after hours, call the command post at 228-7400.

"The key is to call someone so we can get the problem taken care of as soon as possible," Barnes added.

D-M's passport office assists as members make PCS preparations

At Davis-Monthan Air Force Base, summer usually means children are out of school and the permanent change of station season is in full swing. The 355th Mission Support Squadron passport office has unit representatives available to help you determine if your family needs a passport or a visa, and, if so, to facilitate the process to get one.

The 355th MSS processes and provides official no-fee passports and visas to active-duty members, Department of Defense employees and dependents only when traveling on official orders to an overseas location, which requires an official passport.

"DOD personnel PCSing from Davis-Monthan must ensure their dependents are medically cleared through the 355th Medical Group overseas clearance section before submitting passport applications," said Joseph Cardwell, 355th MSS passport agent.

Passport applications should be submitted between 50 and 75 days prior to departure from the local area.

"The prompt submission of passport applications will help insure timely processing and receipt of passports from the Department of State," said Cardwell.

Please call your unit passport monitor to schedule an appointment or for more information concerning passports and visas. Unit monitors are: 12th Air Force (Commander Support Staff): Master Sgt. Rapid Runway Repair breaks record

CES responds to air strike, shows enemy who's boss

By Staff Sgt. Russell Wicke
355th Wing Public Affairs

The 355th Civil Engineer Squadron Rapid Runway Repair Team repaired the Base X runway from a simulated enemy bombing June 12 in record-breaking time of one hour and 33 minutes.

This demonstration of the 355th CES expertise in runway repair during the Davis-Monthan Air Force Base operational readiness exercise was 14 minutes faster than the previous record.

The RRR team sustains simulated attacks and test their skills at a mock runway near the intersection of Sapper and Yuma roads. Explosive ordnance members, in a joint effort with the Exercise Evaluation Team, created a crater 30 feet in diameter and 15 feet deep, to help realistically represent the possible results of an actual attack. A crater that big on a real runway would cripple the base and its ability to launch and recover aircraft.

However, CES members proved it's going to take more than a big crater to keep Base X from launching aircraft against the enemy.

"We are expected to repair a crater like this in less than three hours to be effective in a war," said

Tech. Sgt. James Pope, 355th CES runway repair crater chief. Pope and his team of 16 nearly cut that time in half, showing the enemy the Air Force means business. This isn't the first time RRR's efforts have kept the Base X's aircraft flying during the ORE.

"The runway also hit (the night of June 11) with a bomb that broke a water line," said Pope. "It filled the crater up with water and we had to pump it out before we could repair it. Makes it tough working with mud in the dark."

But even in the dark with mud, the RRR team still managed to beat their deadline by 45 minutes.

And as if the pressure of rapid repair isn't enough, the team has to keep a combat mindset.

"We were ambushed (the morning of June 12) by enemy ground troops during the repair," said Senior Airman Chris Wareing, 355th CES assistant crater chief. "Our crater chief was injured and I had to take over the operation." Even though today was the first time Wareing has had this responsibility, the management transition was seamless.

"This team never ceases to amaze me," said 2nd Lt. T.J. Fryar, 355th CES chief of heavy repair. "You can only tell these guys 'Great job' so many times before it begins to lose its meaning, but it's sincere every time." The team certainly does know what they're doing. With nine pieces of heavy equipment, four pick-up trucks, two forklifts and a tractor trailer all moving and working in the same area, the repair scene looked like mass mayhem.

"It all looks like a mess, but it is organized," said Pope.

"Coordinating this operation is like conducting an orchestra," commented Wareing. "You have to give multiple orders to different operators all at the same time. The biggest challenge is communicating to everyone with all the noise from the equipment."

Although both Pope and Wareing agree that communication and speed are a necessity, getting the job done safely is a priority.

"We stress a safe operation before anything else," said Fryar. "It doesn't matter how fast you work, if it's not done safely, it won't get done at all." Slowing down is paramount when working in the chemical gear at night, said Fryar.

"I'm extremely proud and lucky to have this team," added Fryar. "The runway is the most important part of the airfield and it is mainly airmen and three NCOs we depend on to keep it active."

Fryar is certain the accomplishments of CES's RRR have sent a message to the enemy. "You can't keep our aircraft on the ground."

Online registration, voting expands

By Army Sgt. 1st Class Doug Sample

American Forces Press Service

A Department of Defense voting experiment in the 2000 presidential elections that allowed military and overseas voters to cast their ballots through the Internet will expand in 2004.

Beginning this fall, Federal Voting Assistance Program officials hope to get as many as 100,000 military members — stateside and overseas — their eligible dependents and U.S. citizens living outside the United States to take part in the secure electronic registration and voting experiment, said Polli Brunelli, the program director. The experiment covers only those U.S. citizens who fall under the Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Absentee Voting Act.

Mandated by Congress, project-eligible voters from participating project states will be able to register and vote electronically via any Windows-based personal computer with Internet access from anywhere in world, Brunelli said.

In the 2000 experiment, 84 citizens located in 21 states and 11 countries voted in jurisdictions in South Carolina, Texas, Florida and Utah, proving the theory that online voting could work for voters wherever they lived, Brunelli said.

"We conducted a small 'proof-of-concept' experiment for the 2000 presidential election, and it was very successful. Now we are conducting another electronic voting project. Congress wants it to be large enough to be statistically relevant. This will allow us to make supportable recommendations to ... Congress on the future of Internet voting for (absentee voters)," she said.

Brunelli said that 10 states are interested in participating: Arkansas, Florida, Hawaii, Minnesota, North Carolina, South Carolina, Utah, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Washington.

"We're looking for volunteer voters to participate in the project," she explained, "and we have a Web site where interested voters can see if their voting jurisdiction is participating in the project. Beginning later this year, the voter can sign up, then register and be able to vote in the 2004 elections."

According to Brunelli, local and state election officials will use the system to receive voter registration applications, provide ballots to voters and accept voted ballots.

Brunelli said security during the registration and ballot process is a primary concern. The system will use digital signatures for registration and ballot encryption as part of the security features.

"People are concerned about Internet security. We've looked at the threats that could happen to this type of system, and we've developed mitigating measures to guard against those threats," she said.

Brunelli said that not every county in participating states will be part of the program. She said voters can find a list of participating jurisdictions on the program's Web site at <http://www.serveusa.gov>. Counties that do participate will include the "full ballot" for that election — local, state and federal, she said.

Post-deployment assessment improves health care

By Tech. Sgt. David Jablonski
Air Force Print News

The Air Force surgeon general is meeting the health challenges of airmen returning from Operation Iraqi Freedom with a more vigorous, face-to-face approach.

Health-care providers have expanded and improved existing procedures by combining a larger database of existing health information about airmen, with more detailed information collected throughout their deployment, said Col. Deneice Van Hook, the SG's director of operational health support.

Injuries, changes in health, environmental conditions, and other potential factors are looked at with greater scrutiny to ensure any changes are documented and assessed, she said.

"Throughout the '90s we have always done post-deployment health assessments, but our approach now is much more robust," Van Hook said.

"In the past, our post-deployment health-assessment questionnaire was a minimal form with six questions. The new form has 24 questions and airmen now meet face-to-face with health-care providers to look at actual things they may have come in contact with while deployed, and to personally and privately discuss physical- or mental-health issues. It gives them a more secure feeling that somebody cares about their health."

This aggressive approach is part of a process that spans the length of an airman's career from accession through retirement and beyond, she said.

"The improvements in automation over the last 10 years have helped us compile personal health-care data and look at it in a better way," Van Hook said. "It's part of an ongoing process to improve our ability to care for airmen. Before an airman deploys, health-care providers ensure all data is current and that any pre-existing conditions that may preclude deployment, such as pregnancy, are identified. Airmen also complete a detailed pre-deployment questionnaire, receive a thorough medical records review, provide a blood sample, and obtain information about possible hazards that may exist at the deployment location."

During the deployment, health, and health risks are monitored, usually by a deployed preventive-medicine team. The team monitors issues such as food, water and environmental hazards. Any chemical or biological threats are assessed on the spot and adjustments for protection are made while in theater.

For example, if mosquitoes present a malaria threat, technicians can devise a plan to control the threat and provide preventive treatment. Teams are also able to adapt to changes within the deployment location or to follow-on locations.

As part of the redeployment process airmen also undergo a detailed, face-to-face health assessment. Technicians ensure a new blood sample is collected and stored for future reference. Within 30 days of return, a quality-assurance check is performed to ensure all requirements were met and the medical record is complete.

"Our focus is preventive and long term," said Van Hook.

"Our goal is to have a total health picture of the individual by capturing conditions in their workplace, in their home and at every location that person has deployed to. We take a look at how all these things interact so we can do a better job at predicting and preventing potential illnesses."

This preventive approach to health care at work, at home and in the field represents a more long-term approach that allows health-care providers to better predict illness and keep one step ahead of the threat, Van Hook said.

the 355th Wing. Nelson explained the exercise consists of four stations, each one set to remove equipment and uniform items from the aircrew member in a certain order. These four stations are called the Aircrew Contamination Control Area.

"The aircrew member receives critical skills needed to survive in a chemical warfare environment from this exercise," said Senior Master Sgt. Robert Manning, 355th OSS life support superintendent.

"We start by receiving the pilot from the aircraft with a big plastic bag over his body and plastic booties over his boots," said Nelson. "That is the first thing to come off." From that point the pilot has his weapon removed and then his gear.

"Station two involves helmet and mask removal and a wipe down check for contamination," said Nelson. Stations three and four are for overgarment and undergarment removal he said.

Although it may sound simple enough, the exercise can be rigorous. "It takes approximately 15 to 20 minutes to run aircrew members through the ACCA line," said Nelson. But the exercise runs as if the aircrew member were actually contaminated with chemicals.

"We train for a real-world chemical warfare environment," said Nelson. "Iraq can be one example, especially if chemicals are introduced during the war."

The pilot decon exercise is just one part to the whole Air Force story on how it is prepared to fight and win.

Mom defends military as more than a job, pay check

By Army Pfc. Christina Carde
11th Public Affairs Detachment

While sitting at my desk writing my daily article for the Freedom Watch, the local base newspaper in Bagram, Afghanistan, my co-worker casually turned to me and suggested that I type my name in a search engine to see all of the articles I've written that have been posted on the Internet. Not thinking anything of it, I typed my name in and began to scroll down headlines of stories I've written since my deployment to Afghanistan.

Cort Kirkwood, a journalist and editor of The Daily News Record in Harrisonburg, Va., had read an article about me run by the Department of Defense Web news site, Defend America, entitled "A Mom's Mission" and had decided to rip it to shreds. He called me everything from basically an unfit mother for leaving my son to go off to war to a sellout for enlisting in the Army for "30 pieces of silver," a.k.a., the Montgomery G.I. Bill.

As I read over the article, I

Patriotism

realized that it was not only an attack on my three year-old son and me, but an attack on all mothers deployed in the service of their country.

However, since Kirkwood believes he is the subject matter expert on the lives of women in the military he has never met or spoken to, I thought I would take the time to broaden his horizons using a few points he made in his article.

"Patriotism ain't the real reason Pfc. Christina signed up (for the Army). She enlisted for college benefits and to improve her family's lot in life... she enlisted for 30 pieces of silver."

Before I joined the Army, my son and I were living in one of the worst sections in the New York City area, where getting your next drug fix took nothing more than walking across the street or knocking on the neighbor's door.

Working up to 60 hours a week was just barely paying the bills, and my two-year old son could have walked out the door at any time and been shot during a drive-by.

I suppose I could have taken the alternate route and applied for public assistance so upstanding citizens like Kirkwood could pay my bills for me, but I decided to get out of the rut I was in on my own and joined the service.

Now my son lives in a neighborhood where you can hear a pin drop and lights are out by 9 p.m.

"Who are the military morons who think this is a good idea (to allow mothers to deploy overseas)?"

When I came to this portion of the article, I could do nothing but sit back and laugh at the irony of his statement. The same "military morons" who give American women a chance to serve their country and provide for their families, are the same who fight and die along side many of these women in today's combat operations. They are the ones who give journalists like Kirkwood the freedom of press and speech to write tasteless, unprofessional and uneducated "news articles" such as "The Case of Private Christina."

At least these mothers can return home with a sense of pride and accomplishment and be able to tell their children that they had a part in defending their country.

What will Kirkwood be able to say other than he bashed the integrity and courage of these female troops during a time of war?

"Perhaps the would-be MacArthurs see nothing wrong with a mother dumping on her young son," was the final statement that stood out for me in the article.

Like many other deployed parents out here, I haven't seen my son in six months. However, I know my son is in a safe place with everything he needs.

He will never be a child who has to wear second-hand clothing or the one stuck at home because I can't afford to send him on a class trip. That is the way things should be, and if I have to deploy in search of every Bin Laden and Hussein on the planet to keep it that way, then so be it.

"At least these mothers can return home with a sense of pride and accomplishment and be able to tell their children that they had a part in defending their country."

D-M maneuvers through June ORE

By Staff Sgt. Russell Wicke
355th Wing Public Affairs

The 355th Wing and 55th Electronic Combat Group practiced their wartime skills June 10 through 13 in an operational readiness exercise.

The units' airmen were evaluated in such tasks as food preparation, force protection, quick-turn maintenance, mission planning and weapons delivery, combat search and rescue, perimeter defense and much more.

Members of the 355th Wing Inspections and Plans Office went to great detail preparing different situations ranging from ground attacks to inbound missile drills. Everyone got their share of long hours and lessons learned, but overall improvement from the ORE in April was acknowledged by Col. Larry Stutzriem, 355th Wing commander.

D-M 'Ironman' heads to Armed Forces triathlon championship

By Master Sgt. Dan Carpenter
355th Wing Public Affairs

Bryant Hafler's pursuit of athletic excellence continues to pay big dividends.

The 39-year-old master sergeant from the 355th Component Maintenance Squadron was recently selected to compete as a member of the Air Force team in the 2003 Armed Forces Triathlon Championships.

"This opportunity gives me a chance to test myself against the best triathletes in the military," said Hafler, who left Wednesday for the competition, which starts at 9 a.m. Saturday at Point Mugu, Calif. "In addition, it gives me a shot to represent the entire U.S. military at the World Military Triathlon Championships."

Hafler started racing bicycles in 1987, and switched to triathlons in 1992. He qualified and competed in the Ironman Triathlon, held each year in Hawaii, in 1998, and was selected in November 2002 to compete in this year's Ironman, to be held in October.

"My training regimen has become more focused and specific the past few years," said Hafler. "I have a plan for each workout and try not to waste time with 'junk miles.' It starts the first week in January and runs through October with a two-week 'sanity break' mid-year, depending on that year's race schedule. In late fall and winter, I ride mountain bikes, get in the gym, stay active and give myself a mental break."

Hafler currently works out seven days a week, with three of those days being double workouts. He incorporates each of the triathlon events into his workout regimen.

"My current schedule - about 15-20 hours per week - is what I use to race half Ironman distance and less during the year," he added. "It will change at the end of June when the intensity goes down and the distances go up to build endurance for the Ironman."

Hafler has two very distinct goals in the coming months ... one is to finish in the top six at the Armed Forces Championship, thereby earning him a berth to the World championships; and the other to finish the Ironman in 10 hours or less.

"Representing our country in Holland at ing hours of operation:

Tuesday through Friday; Lap Swim; 8 to 10:50 a.m.

Tuesday through Friday; Open Swim; 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Tuesday and Thursday; Family Swim; 5 to 8 p.m.

Wednesday, Friday and Sunday; Family Swim; 5 to 6 p.m.

the Worlds would be great," he added. "Finishing the Ironman in less than 10 hours would place me in the top 25 percent of the field, which comprises the fastest professional and age group triathletes in the world."

To qualify for the World military championships, Hafler will have to be one of the fastest six athletes to complete the 1,500-meter swim, 24.8-mile bike ride, and 6.2-mile run.

"I didn't get to this point by myself," Hafler added. "My wife, Marianne, has been totally supportive and encouraging. In addition, my squadron commander and my supervisory chain have been great."

"It gives me a good feeling to know that all the early mornings and hard training have paid off with this recognition."

Saturday, Sunday and Holidays; Open Swim; 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Monday - Closed

The outdoor pool's daily fees are as follows:

Child Admission - $1; Children 2 and younger - Free; Adult Admission - $2; Guest
